

Paige Mosbrucker

EDU 315

December 14, 2017

I believe that teaching language arts is teaching students the skills they need to be successful in their future. The skills I would focus on is listening, speaking, writing, and reading. Listening is important for students to know so when they get older they know how to communicate with others. Speaking goes along with listening. In order to have good communication with others students need to know how to take turns speaking and listening. Writing is essential to almost everything that students will be doing in their future. Making sure students know how to properly write in a professional way is important to me. I want to make sure students are spelling words right and having correct punctuation and capital letters where they are needed. The last thing that I want to focus on is reading. Reading is important in order to learn. I want to make sure students are understanding how to read and comprehend what they are reading. Listening, speaking, writing, and reading are all aspects of language arts that will be beneficial to students in their futures. Those four things will be things that will be carried throughout each students schooling and will be carried through to their futures.